I'm saddened to see that such unjust actions are being taken towards the success of satellite radio. Attacking land-bound radio stations after the "wave of conservatism" due to the Super Bowl incident is one thing, but satellite radio is a paid monthly service provided just as any other service - it's not free reign broadcasting like the Super Bowl. I was happy to hear of XM's removal of commercials on their music channels a few months back, as I feel cheated paying my cable bill every month to see 1/4 of all my cable viewing to be commercials. I believed in satellite radio because it provides an untouched source of radio that has since been beaten to death by corporate America. I pay for satellite radio much like I would pay for a compact disc. I pay for it, I listen to it without commercial interruption, and I enjoy it. Please do not force governmental rules and regulations on something that is just trying to provide America what it wants in a time of commercial and corporate overload.
